JENKIN LLOYD JONES

The Greatest Democrat in the Democratic City of Chicago.

William Kent contributes an article to the July American Magazine about Jenkin Lloyd Jones, the great preacher of Chicago. Says Mr. Kent: "Abraham Lincoln once said that if he could find a church that had for its creed only the Golden Rule he would join it. This was the church that Jenkin Lloyd Jones conceived, and, as a civic and religious tribute to the great Illinoisan, this community center was christened 'The Abraham Lincoln Center.' In this building All Souls church maintains its individuality and activities, and within it also live the activities that are usually 'over there'—a gymnasium, manual training, domestic science classes, reading rooms, libraries, lecture courses, study classes in religion, literature, citizenship, etc.—a social, civic and religious center on the boulevard.

Jenkin Lloyd Jones has had the dynamic energy to plan a future so wide that it would have stilled a less powerful engine. He has demonstrated that an undenominational church can be relevant, religious, permanent and socially useful in the highest degree; that such a church is the home of civics and the handmaiden of the state. Just as in the great parliament of religions in Chicago in 1893 he and his colleagues proved the fallacy of the lines dividing the various faiths, so he has shown that there has been no need of a new religion, no need of a new church, no need of a new center, no need of a new forum for public discussion. If Jenkin Lloyd Jones of Chicago is a radical, he is a constructive radical, and if justice is true conservatism, as he believes it to be, then he is a great conservative.

This man who knows the philosophy and the prophets, the poets, knows the people just as well; they don't fool him, or shock him, or repel him. He is among them and of them. This sage has proven himself a practical success as a leader in the march of progress. A great university has delighted to honor his mental qualities, his fellow citizens now and in future generations will ever appreciate and honor those human factors that make him a 'Lincoln man,' the greatest Democrat in the Democratic city of Chicago."

A South Arabian Food Plant. Jowari, a tall, slender plant resembling corn and headed with a grain something like millet, is the Abad's chief crop. He feeds the stalk to his camels and eats the grain himself. Three crops a year are produced. Jowari requires little cultivation except weeding, which the Abad does by hand, and when ripe he cuts it off close to the ground with his hunting knife. New shoots spring up from the roots to become the next crop. For a camel load of about 125 pounds he receives at Aden an average of two rupees, or $0.48. A fair yearly yield is twenty camel loads an acre—Consular and Trade Reports.

True Charges.

She—Did you see where some man declares that women are not honest? He—Well, he's right in saying so. She (fiercely)—When did you ever know me to do a dishonest thing? He (tenderly)—When you robbed me of my peace of mind and stole my heart, you dear little thief—New York World.

WEBSTERVILLE.

Annual Picnic of Baptist School Was Held Tuesday.

Ninety-three were present at the eleventh annual picnic of the Websterville Baptist Sunday school, which was held Tuesday at J. A. Cummings' farm on the east hill. The barge of W. Fraser of Granvilleville carried fifty-two scholars and the three-seater of Mr. Lawson of Websterville transported a number of ladies and smaller children while several single teams were also used. Mr. and Mrs. Cummings welcomed the picnicers to their new home and at 11 o'clock the party went to the picnic grounds, only five minutes' walk from the house. Mr. Cummings had placed swings there and in many ways added to the pleasure of the company during the day. Dinner was served at noon and the afternoon was pleasantly spent in sports and social intercourse.

Yesterday's ball game between the Italian Athletic club and the Hanover Athletic club was called off, owing to the absence of the visitors' battery. A portion of the team appeared on the field at 4:15 and proposed to play the game by patching their ranks with a local battery. The Italians decided, however, that, as the game was advertised to be played with the Hanover team, it would be unfair to the crowd to proceed with a team composed partly of players from this city. Such occurrences have happened here several times this season, and it is well that yesterday's attempt was nipped in the bud. The game will be played at Rangers' field this afternoon at 4:15, when, it is expected, the related Hanover battery will be in evidence. The batteries will be: Weaver and Rosini for the locals and Stevens and Page for the visitors. Both of the latter men were formerly connected with the Lowell and Fall River teams of the New England league, and an exciting contest is promised.
